Nucleophosmin/B23 and p53: two components of an active regulatory system in N-myc overexpressed, tumorigenic feline cells. The deregulation of oncogenic signals is associated with important changes in cell function. The regulatory proteins nucleophosmin/B23 and p53 have been proposed to be involved in the signal transduction pathways of the normal process of the cell and appear to be altered in the transformed state. We have examined the role of p53 and nucleophosmin/B23 in the development of N-myc overexpressed, tumorigenic feline cells. c-fos is a proto-oncogene which is a known target of p53. By immunoblotting, nucleophosmin/B23 and p53 appear to be increased in the expression in the transformed feline cells. Using monoclonal 6a5afdab4c
