[Adverse effects of major psychiatric medicines]. Although the majority of adverse drug effects of psychiatric drugs are not life-threatening, they may significantly affect the quality of life of patients. Physicians must therefore be aware of potential side effects, and adverse drug reactions (ADR) in general, whenever a new drug is prescribed. The most common adverse effects are weight gain, extrapyramidal symptoms (EPS), hyperprolactinemia, disturbance of sexual function, diaphoresis, and oversedation. These are listed in Table 1. The treatment of insomnia is particularly challenging. The most common adverse effects of antiepileptic drugs are insomnia, mood swings, psychotic symptoms and hyperkinesia. Other important side effects of these drugs are deterioration of neurological and cognitive functions. Of interest, recent reports on schizophrenia suggest that antipsychotic drugs may also cause neurodegeneration. In patients with nonpsychotic disorders, treatment may induce depression, agitation, impulsive behaviour, and suicidal thoughts. Among antidepressants, tricyclic drugs are the most frequently associated with adverse events. They may cause disturbances in cardiovascular function, nightmares, and have been associated with increasing the risk of delirium in geriatric patients. The selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors (SSRIs) are associated with a lower frequency of adverse effects, but a larger number of unusual effects, the most common of which are neuroendocrine and gastrointestinal symptoms. Promoter hypermethylation of the p16 gene in colorectal adenomas. Loss of the cell cycle inhibitor p16 has been shown to play a role in malignant transformation of both skin and colon. The aim of this study was to assess the frequency of p16 gene promoter hypermethylation in adenomas of the large bowel. In addition, p16 gene expression and the methylation status of HLA-DR were examined in normal colonic mucosa of patients with ulcerative colitis. The methylation status of the p16 gene was analyzed by methylation-specific PCR (MSP) in a series of 68 consecutive colorectal adenomas, 17 juvenile polyps (JP) and 25 healthy mucosal samples (H) from the large intestine. In addition, immunohistochemical analysis of HLA-DR expression and quantitative RT-PCR of p16 mRNA expression were performed in normal mucosa of the large intestine from 17 patients with ulcerative colitis. Hypermethylation of the p16 gene was detected

Inhibition of oxidative phosphorylation does not affect the susceptibility of the central nervous system to seizures induced by kainic acid in the rat. Antioxidant supplementation has been suggested as an alternative therapeutic strategy for epilepsy. In this study, we investigated the effect of antioxidant supplementation on seizure susceptibility induced by the glutamatergic agonist kainic acid in rats. Antioxidants were administered on the basis of protocol (administration before the administration of kainic acid) and concentrations (none, 15, 30 or 60 mg/kg intraperitoneally). Antioxidants were administered after kainic acid administration and seizures were scored visually from 0 (no seizure) to 3 (death). Antioxidants did not affect seizure susceptibility regardless of protocol and concentrations. Antioxidants given only before the administration of kainic acid also did not protect against seizure susceptibility. The failure to protect indicates that the oxidative damage associated with seizures in this model is probably not the cause of neuronal damage that occurs to produce the seizures., but he just shakes his head. "I can't," he says. "I'm not supposed to be here tonight." The room again falls silent. No one knows what to say. "What are we going to do now?" And then the thought hits him. He sits up and pulls the can towards him. "Um, I'm thirsty." He opens it. The room begins to vibrate with collective laughter. ... "So, how'd he get out?" Ray asks, looking at what's left of all the beer cans on the floor. "He fell out," I answer. "Maybe one of the kids at a party forgot to lock their door." "Wow." "Yeah." Ray hands me the newspaper. It's filled with all the wordy details of the city council meeting. "I'm not surprised. They just want to censor us." I shrug. "I'm not surprised either. I guess I've learned to just do what I want anyway." What The Dead Boy Says: Do not move beyond the limit of this molar. You must not
