The IoT platform and marketplace will be available as beta status to enterprise developers and cloud-native startups later this year. AWS IoT will provide a unified platform for the devices and systems being used around the world to create and build applications. This platform will make it easy to connect devices to the cloud, stream data between devices and to add intelligence to devices at the edge. The new initiative is aligned with AWS' strength in marrying the software, services and infrastructure you already use to build and run applications in the cloud' platform strategy. Speaking about the announcement, AWS VP Nick Travers says 'this is where AWS IoT begins to deliver on its promise: enhancing a software-defined ecosystem that provides the foundation to accelerate innovation'. Currently, AWS IoT is available to select enterprise customers and startups. The platform allows developers to store data from IoT devices, which can then be used to drive insights and real-time data analytics. While 'lambda' functions allow developers to run more complex tasks at the edge and programmatic actions at the cloud scale. Over time, AWS hopes that the platform will support the 'next-generation of internet-connected devices' through its standard set of APIs. These APIs will help developers ensure devices work smoothly together, and reduce the need to build and maintain device-specific software. AWS IoT joins several of AWS' other services like EC2 and S3, which are already in beta. These services are designed to speed up the creation of new and better applications. A critical aspect for any startup that wants to grow their business is to ensure their software and systems are run quickly and efficiently. Seven Ways To Steal A Show At Your Next Event The biggest day of your business' year is almost upon you. You've been working hard, rallying your team, and when the big day comes, you'll be facing a new set of challenges -
