That was certainly a term most Californians heard in 2016: their tax dollars used to pay for Trump's "build a wall" fantasy. As President Donald Trump heads to El Paso, Texas, on Tuesday to show off his plan to separate families at the border, the cost of the 25,000-foot-tall structure has become a common topic, mostly in the context of Mexico financing it. The price tag is most often put at anywhere between $20 billion to $70 billion, but it varies with the building materials chosen and the wall's height, width and other features. For example, there were plenty of columns in San Diego: U.S. taxpayers funded $98.7 million to build them. However, there were fewer in Imperial County, where a structure that would have cost $32 million was completed in about half the time. Those figures are, of course, from the governor's 2018 budget, which said the state's contribution to the wall — $200 million from the state's general fund — would be spent on pre-construction, design, engineering, permitting, right-of-way and acquisition, and construction. State taxpayers also have a history of helping finance border wall projects. In 2009, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger set aside more than $100 million in a state budget to build a new 150,000-square-foot detention facility for children being held at the border, and California also helped fund a fence along the U.S.-Mexico border in San Diego County that cost $25 million in 2006. The same year, Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown approved $60 million in funding for four border fences under construction, and funding for each of the roughly $1.6 billion Texas border wall has already come from state funds, according to Texas Department of Public Safety officials. "To date, we've received no requests for assistance from California," said Phil Rozensky, spokesman for the California Department of Justice. But San Diego has a history of helping California pay for border walls, with at least $98.7 million in state funds going to the construction of six border fencing structures and a similar amount for the Aliso Creek fence in Imperial County. The San Diego County projects are listed under the Department of Homeland Security. The $4.5 billion U.S.-Mexico border fence — a combination of steel slats and
