Turbo Sloths is a game about feeling as dumb as you are. You get to be a monkey dressed as a dinosaur. You get to sit on a turbo trainer (something that exists only in early 90s video game advertisements) and attempt to jump and crash your way to a high score. The game is great at giving you small bursts of adrenaline that make you feel like you're on a playground in your front yard, and sometimes you probably are, except something's going to splatter you the wrong way.

Turbo Sloths was created by Studio Next in San Francisco. Studio Next is a solo studio that makes a wide range of game experiences for people of all ages and skill levels. Turbo Sloths is part of the Playdeth line, and Playdeth games focus on simple gameplay and getting people interacting and having fun.

What sets Turbo Sloths apart is the game's intensity. Visuals are loud, bright, and perfectly crafted to make the game one of the most trippy experiences you

, 14+ Today's post is courtesy of Ann Hecheman from the City of Victorville Development and Planning Department, who sent me the second instalment of a new video series called Thoughts & Images — which she describes as “an instructional video series produced by the city as a supplement to our narrative storytelling presentations to the general public, featuring small programs developed to meet the needs of diverse audiences.” She told me about her new project: The City of Victorville is partnering with Nevada's Nye County Library and few other local organizations to bring together a series of presentations that explore the history of the desert region. The first program of this series, called Hot Placemats, is a staged performance created by our Community Arts Coordinator Brandy Forest. It will be performed at Nye Library on Saturday, November 4. Hot Placemats tells the story of how the desert made way for Las Vegas, from a historical perspective. The performances take place on the south lawn of the library. The library is open on Saturdays from 10 am to 3 pm. The performance is in partnership with a two-day conference at the Nye County Library called Desert Monarchs: Stories of the American Southwest. Ann Hecheman, the head of marketing communications for the city, will be co-presenting the program with Mari Cornett, Director of Operations for the Nye County Library. Placemats were a material popular in the summers of the late 1800s when traveling mothers living in rural backyards from New York to Boston and beyond wrapped stacks of pages sewn together and stored in bamboo racks. But once the world turned electric, placemats would roll off the shelves. When folks wanted a place to throw down, hide a bottle or eat their sandwich, they created a special place — a bar or restaurant. The program includes actors, video clips and live music, as well as audience participation. It includes stories and foods that were derived from the desert region. Placemats are made from the same tree that gave shade to some of the first dreamers to settle the Mojave. The City of Victorville asks that patrons present for rehearsals and attend both performance days. In the spirit of cooperative citizenship, event attendants are asked to express their appreciation for the city's support of the project at a showtime kiosk, located on the south lawn near the fountain. Attendees may also leave a
