Citation analysis is a traditional yet powerful way of quantifying a researcher's impact in his or her academic field and also helps quantify the quality of research as determined by other scholars with similar interests. Scholar-marketing scholars have been publishing for a long time, but their articles are not easy to find in modern databases. My search strategies used regular strings, including articles, with "marketing" and "research" words such as "market research," "marketing research," "market research studies," and "marketing studies." I also searched for articles in our journals, the International Marketing Review, the Journal of Consumer Marketing, and the Journal of Marketing, among others. This search produced more than 2,000 possible articles. In order to limit the search, I searched within a time frame of the last 30 years to get articles from the time-frame used by the citation databases. Professor Hult is the author of Best-selling books on international business, marketing strategy, and globalization, and he has many contributions to books on global strategy, and marketing strategy. His work has appeared in several management journals, marketing periodicals and newsletters, and trade journals. He is also a popular contributor to general business-to-business journals. On a recent tour of the University of Columbia in Brazil, he met with several colleagues in the management and organizational development community to discuss IB approaches. Dr. Hult is a well-known keynote speaker on international business, international marketing, global supply chain management, global strategy, and marketing strategy. He teaches in doctoral, masters, and undergraduate programs at Michigan State University. He also teaches frequently in executive development programs and has developed a large clientele of the worlds top multinational corporations (e.g., ABB, Albertsons, Avon, BG, Bechtel, Bosch, BP, Defense Logistics Agency, Dominos, FedEx, Ford, FreshDirect, General Motors, GroceryGateway, HSBC, IBM, Michigan Economic Development Corporation, Masco, NASA, Raytheon, Shell, Siemens, State Farm, Steelcase, Tech Data, and Xerox).
