does vprintf seem to always return 0 when fflush(stdout) should allow the data to be sent? I am having a bit of trouble using `std::vprintf`. I have a program which I run in the terminal (this is on Linux) which processes strings from the terminal in turn. The strings are stored in an array of structs which has three values. The three values are the string, a char and a long. The `vprintf` function seems to work perfectly when I am not trying to flush the buffer with `fflush(stdout)`, however it seems to just
